The overall winner of the "1000 Millas Sport de la República Argentina 2016" will be the competitor having the lowest number of penalty points, after disregarding the test with the highest penalty from the first and second stage (1 in each stage). There are no disregards for the third stage.

At the end of the addition of the points against for each driver, this score will be multiplied by the specific coefficient for each car.

The coefficient for each car will be given by the year of production of the car. All vehicles built prior to 1-1-1931, irrespective of the date in which they were actually manufactured, will be considered as having been manufactured in 1930. Thus penalty points will be calculated by multiplying penalties by 1.30.

For example, a car from 1950 will have a coefficient of 1.50, which will be multiplied for the points against gained by each driver.

In the general classification, in case two or more cars would get the same score, the winner will be the more antique car.
